The Office of the General Counsel (OGC) is the highly respected legal team for the Department of Health and Human Services (HHS), providing quality representation and legal advice on a wide range of highly visible national issues including food safety, faith-based and community initiatives, responsible fatherhood, refugee resettlement, protection of victims of trafficking and victims of abuse, improving the quality of nursing home care, protecting the privacy of medical records, reducing medical errors, HIV/AIDS research and protection and matters dealing with intellectual property. OGC's mission is to support the development and implementation of the Department's programs by providing the highest quality legal services to the Secretary of HHS and the organization's various agencies and divisions.

Comprised
of a team of
more than 300

attorneys and a comprehensive administrative support staff, OGC is one of the largest and most diverse and talented law offices in the country. Many OGC lawyers are heavily involved in administrative and Federal court litigation, frequently including extensive trial preparation and hearings. In collaborative partnerships with the Department of Justice, OGC attorneys may have primary responsibility for complex district court and appellate litigation with many attorneys trying cases and arguing appeals in the initial years of service. The OGC team also writes and reviews proposed regulations affecting significant issues of health, medical practice and social policy.
